

Linda Dooley
The Bryce Harlow Foundation

Linda Dooley is president of the Bryce Harlow Foundation, a non-profit educational organization based in Washington, DC, that promotes integrity in professional advocacy and educates teachers and students about the important role that advocacy plays in the development of sound public policy.

Before moving to Washington, DC, Linda worked in education in California. She taught regular and special education and spent most of her career as an assessment specialist, providing diagnostic, academic and sensory-motor testing to children with learning disabilities. When her husband, Cal, was elected to Congress in 1991, Linda served several years as the executive assistant to Dr. Patricia Woods of the Woods Institute, an adult education organization that specializes in courses in American government. She also worked for several years as a part-time director in the student employment office at Georgetown University.

Linda holds a Bachelor of Science degree in child development from Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, a masters' degree in Education Administration from Cal State Bakersfield, and several teaching and administrative credentials. Linda is married to Cal Dooley and has two grown daughters – Brooke and Emily.
